

How to holler "Fore!"

Screaming a warning when your ball is headed for another human isn't a courtesy, it's a grave responsibility. It should be a combination of a scream and sharp bark, so that everybody within 250 yards snaps their heads in your direction. The idea is to make the sound travel faster than it really can, since your sound waves are competing with the incredible velocity of the golf ball itself. Cupping your hands will be help. So will more than one voice; everyone in the foursome should yell. It's surprising that people have the presence of mind to think of "Fore!" before actually yelling it. In every other walk of life, we holler, "Look out!" Come to think of it, "Look out!" isn't such a bad idea. The point is to make everyone in eyesight to duck and cover.
