GOLF

Tip from the Pro

Playing Golf Shots into the Wind

Since windy days are few and far between in the Columbia area, most golfers struggle with club and shot selection when playing into the wind. The tendency is to swing harder in an effort to generate more club head speed. This thought is actually counter-productive in the sense that, the harder and faster we swing, the more club head speed we produce and thus, the more backspin we put on the ball. Backspin makes the ball climb straight up a front facing wind resulting in the ball falling short of the target. The best way to get the ball to your target is to take one or two extra clubs, choke down (producing a lower ball flight) and swing easy, greatly reducing backspin making the ball less affected by the wind. Don't fight the wind! Let it work in your favor.
